

DSI: Death Scene Investigation

Parker Laine – Department Head (recommended as host)

Surly and quick-witted, Parker Laine has been a DSI from childhood, when his first bike went missing. Since then, his skills have advanced to the point he can afford to be smug. Not much gets past Parker Laine, and he has become something of a legend in the crime unit.

Karen Musterfield – one of the department heads

One of the DSI unit heads, Karen is resourceful, always composed and a fierce investigator. She specializes in biology, specifically hair, fibers and zoology.

Kincaid “Sherlock” Farmer

Kincaid is a smooth talker, full of one-liners and quite the ladies’ man. In spite of all this, he is one hell of an investigator, and earned his nickname of “Sherlock” because of his forensic “tool” of choice – a magnifying glass. Kincaid specializes in chemistry, specifically paint and glass, shoe prints and drugs and alcohol.

Barbara Bufferton

Barbara has the biggest hair and brightest lipstick this side of 1982. She is a fantastic investigator though, and takes the teasing about her physical appearance in stride. Her forte is chemistry, specifically tool marks, striations, arson and post mortem small intestine analysis.

David Logan

Logan, as he’s referred to by his colleagues, could be the only person in the CSU without a sense of humour. In fact, even when he finds something funny, he doesn’t laugh or even crack a smile. He specializes in ballistics.

Detective Henrietta (Henry) Grace

Henrietta, or Henry as she is affectionately referred to by her colleagues, is very quiet, but a fierce detective who is a bulldog in the box, most people who don’t know Henry find it hard to imagine such a quiet, seemingly shy person can turn so fierce when interrogating a suspect. A master on interpreting human behavior, not much gets past the young Henrietta.

Detective Ethan Potter

Detective Ethan Potter has been a detective for six years, and is a regular practical joker. His favourite gag is to tie a string to a twenty dollar bill, drop it on the floor, hide around the corner and, as his coworkers bend to pick it up, he pulls it away. Detective Potter can afford to be laid back – he has an eerie knack for breaking a suspect, and in his six years has only left three cases unsolved.

Hillary Besoin – The Rookie

Fresh out of the National Forensic Academy, Hillary is a bit skittish and often refers to her procedural and reference manuals. Despite this, she knows her stuff and has eyes like a hawk. Hillary’s fortes are mineralogy, documents, forgeries and paper chemistry.

Jamie Bryson – The Coroner (Optional Character)

Like most coroners, Jamie Bryson is a bit weird, but a fantastic pathologist. Jamie loves fish, and keeps a tank in the pathologist's office, often stopping to stare at the saltwater fish swimming around. Understandably, Jamie is a vegetarian.
