

Marooned

Brianne Caine

The Scientist

Before crashing on the island, Brianne was a scientist, and had just received a one million dollar grant to continue her research on using cancerous cells to assist the body in the healing process of scars, tissue damage and bone fractures. She is smart, pretty and has a South African Accent.

Vaughan Mead

The Outdoorsman

Vaughan Mead is a grizzled-looking man with kind eyes and a peace about him that is truly mystical. He has great hunting skills, and is usually the one to bring back a wild boar to the beach for everyone to eat. He has a soft, soothing voice that sometimes cracks, and is quiet most of the time, spending many hours in silent reflection. In the real world, Vaughan was a data entry clerk, although seeing his skills with a knife, most people have a hard time believing his profession.

Mark Tobler

The Doctor

Back in the real world, Mark was an emergency room doctor, and his skills have come in very since the plane crash. Although fifteen people he tried to save after the crash died, he is responsible for everyone else being alive today. Mark is a caring doctor with a fantastic bedside manner and the natural talent to rise ahead as a leader. He believes that with his medical knowledge and Brianne's science, the two can discover the island's healing secrets and bring the phenomenon back to civilization to heal the masses. Since crashing on the island, he has reluctantly become the leader of the survivors.

Renee Roy

The Mysterious Recluse

Renee is not one of the crash survivors. She does live on the beach, but away from the rest of the survivors. She has been living on the island for over a decade, and because of the solitude, she is a bit strange. Renee has chosen to remain away from the others living on the island, is a great hiker and knows the island better than anyone there - at least, topographically.

Samir Youseff

The Military Man

Back in the real world, Samir was in the Iraqi military. He is muscular, well-spoken and a natural hunter. He is second only to Vaughan Mead for bringing home the bacon, so to speak, and he and Vaughan often place bets on who can return with the most food for the crash survivors.

Clive Unger

The Shipwrecked Islander

Clive is not one of the crash survivors. In fact, he was already on the island when the crash occurred. He is a well-trusted member of the beach dwellers, as he helped pull people from the burning plane before it exploded. Although he was living alone in the jungle, now that he has company he does not stray too far from the beach.

Elizabeth Bannister

The Soft-Spoken Stranger

Elizabeth is not one of the crash survivors. For the past four years while on the island, she lived in a small hut near Simon Soldienta's camp. Since the crash, she has left Simon and moved to the beach, where she has not received the warmest welcome. Despite this, she continues to try to win the trust and friendship of the crash survivors, and helps out where she can. She is soft-spoken and gentle.

Lorrie Du Pris

The Ditz Socialite

Since the crash, Lorrie has spent the majority of her days lying on the beach working on her tan. She has read the same issue of Cosmo over 100 times, and often pillages the remains of the plane in search of new magazines to read. Her fashion sense used to serve her well, as in the real world Lorrie was a personal shopper, but her eye for fashion is no help to her here and in addition to feeling useless to the camp, she is also looked upon as a bit of a ditz.

Finn Hockney

The Bad Boy

Finn is the resident bad guy, and enjoys going out of his way to make the other crash survivors despise him. Despite his bad-boy image, he is well-read and wants nothing more than to have a decent conversation with someone - ANYONE - about literature. Thanks to the lack of supplies, Finn has recently given up smoking and is extremely irritated about it. In his real life, Finn was a professional hockey player.

Eva O'brien

The Assertive Librarian

Eva is a young woman with a great smile and a fierce temper. She is just as capable as finding food as the men, and can scurry up a tree to fetch a mango faster than you can say "red hair and freckles". In the real world, Eva was a librarian.
