

Salem Witches co-ed Version

Reverend George Burroughs

The only clergyman accused in the witch trials, Reverend Burroughs is a pious man who enjoys his time in quiet reflection and prayer. He is kind and soft-spoken, and a true aura of peace surrounds him.

Martha Corey

Opinionated and outspoken, Martha Corey's main scandal was her mothering an illegitimate, mixed-race son. She is highly intelligent and likes to research things before coming to a definite conclusion. She is an avid reader, which was one of the reasons she was accused of witchcraft.

Giles Corey

Husband of Martha Corey, Giles is one of only six men accused in the Salem Witch Trials. He is a resolute man with strong opinions and an unwavering loyalty to his family. Like his wife, Giles enjoys reading and his intelligence is far greater than most in Salem Village.

Tituba

Originally from Barbados, Tituba is a slave at the Putnam house. She is outgoing when with the other slaves, but introverted with the villagers. Before being brought to Salem she married a man named John, who also works as a slave at the Putnam residence. It was Tituba's stories of voodoo that inspired the girls to begin the witchcraft accusations.

Deputy John Willard

Deputy John Willard has been the arresting officer for the witch trials for months. He is secretive and usually keeps his opinions to himself, even when arresting a close friend or neighbor.

Bethya Carter

Bethya is more than proper, never steps out of line and is the epitome of the "proper" woman. Most of the village was surprised when she was accused of witchcraft and imprisoned. Bethya speaks with a very faint accent because she is originally from a different town.

Justice Dudley Bradstreet

Justice Dudley Bradstreet has thus far gone along with the witch hunt, and is in charge of signing arrest warrants for those who will be tried for witchcraft. Bradstreet values his place of prominence in the town, and thrives on excitement in an otherwise horribly boring village.

Alice Parker

Alice Parker used to be a beggar, but has pulled herself up by her bootstraps and is now back on her feet. She first came to Salem Village when she was young. She lived with the Putnams for a time and then moved away. When she returned, she lived on the streets before coming into some money. Alice has long, intensely white-blond hair.

Captain John Alden

Captain John Alden is a world-renowned Indian fighter, and carries his sword with pride. Rumour has it that he has lain with many squaws and fathered more than one Indian child. Originally from Boston, the Captain is a hero, and his reputation is known far and wide. He usually carries a sword with him, which was regrettably stripped from him at the time of his imprisonment. He is handsome and charming, and many women have swooned in his presence. Despite this, Captain John Alden is very humble and kind.

Ruth Wilford

Ruth is a total introvert, and lives in a house in the woods. She hardly comes to town, except to purchase the occasional loaf of bread. Usually, Ruth survives off the land, and is rumoured to be a potion-maker.
